SENATOR ALLARD ANNOUNCES PLANS TO OPEN NEW DISTRICT OFFICE IN DURANGO

Washington, D.C. - U.S. Sen. Wayne Allard (R-Colorado) announced Thursday that he plans to open a new district office in Durango in January to serve the residents of southwestern Colorado.

“We are currently looking for office space and interviewing people to staff a one-person constituent office in Durango,” Senator Allard said. “This office will primarily be a place for constituents to get in contact with me, and to seek assistance for any problems they may be experiencing with federal or state government agencies.”

“With Senator Campbell and Congressman McInnis retiring and closing their Durango offices, I see a great need to provide a location in Southwest Colorado so my staff can continue to serve the constituents there,” the Senator said. “We are always looking for better ways to serve the people in all parts of Colorado.”

“I am hopeful that this new office will be up and running, open for business, sometime after the first of the year,” Senator Allard said.

In addition to his new Durango office, Senator Allard currently maintains district offices and staff in Grand Junction, Pueblo, Englewood, Loveland and Colorado Springs, as well as in Washington, D.C.

Southwest Coloradans who need assistance or would like to contact Senator Allard in the meantime should contact his Grand Junction office at (970) 245-9553.
